ORDERS AND DECORATIONS IN THE NAVY.

Admiralty, 13th August, 1926.

THE Secretary of the Admiralty announces that it has been decided, with the KING'S approval, that Orders, decorations and medals shall be worn with frock coat and epaulettes dress and with white dress.

With these dresses, Knights Grand Cross and Knights Grand Commanders of Orders will wear the broad ribbon and badge over the shoulder, star or stars on the left side of the coat, and decorations and medals on the breast. Knights Commanders and Commanders and Companions of the Orders of the Bath, St. Michael and St. George, the Star of India and the Indian Empire will in general wear one badge only, namely, the badge of the senior Order round the neck (a bow tie being worn), but if the occasion requires a junior or foreign badge also to be worn it is to be worn emerging from between the buttons of the coat as in full dress; decorations and medals will be worn on the breast; and Knights Commanders will wear the star or stars on the left side of the coat. Companions of other Orders and members of Orders will wear badges, decorations and medals on the breast.

With frock coat and epaulettes dress the bar from which badges, decorations and medals are suspended is to extend from the shoulder inwards and over the lapel of the coat if necessary. To enable medals to be worn with a frock coat on which ribbons are already sewn, small twist loops or beckets are to be fitted to accommodate the pin of the medal brooch. These beckets are to be placed immediately above or immediately below the top row of medal ribbons, according to the position of the pin of the brooch and are to be so arranged that the ribbons on the frock coat shall be completely covered. Where more than four rows of medal ribbons are sewn on the frock coat it may be necessary, in order to cover them completely, for the medals to be mounted in Court style as described in Clause 12 of Article 167 of the King's Regulations and Admiralty Instructions and slightly to lengthen the ribbons.

Among the more clearly defined prerogatives of the British monarch are those of convoking, adjourning, removing, and dissolving Parliament.

ceremony of a coronation is, therefore, merely a solemn recognition and confirmation of the royal descent, and consequent right of accession, and is not necessary for the security of the title to the crown. It is, however, highly essential, inasmuch as it tends to a formal establishment of those rights which the people claim from the monarch in return for the duty and allegiance they are bound to observe towards the new Sovereign.

Occasionally the eldest son of a peer is summoned to the House.

The principal rules or considerations as generally applied to the selection of Peerage titles are as follows:—

In the first place it should be borne in

In the case of Life Peers the surname is usually (though not always) adopted.

A title once extinct but subsequently revived is rarely re-created in a lower rank than before, but this rule is not an inviolable one [vide titles of Barrymore Eversley].

The name of a county or county town not as a rule permissible as a peerage below the rank of earl (although except may be made in favour of any one particular eminent either as a statesman or in another walk of life). Towns of large population are usually reserved for the higher titles in the peerage.

It may be added that but this and other ceremonies formerly attending the creation of dukes and other peers are no longer observed.

The ducal order, which was extinct, or in abeyance during Elizabeth's reign, was revived by James I. in the person of his favourite, Villiers.

The common robe of a baron consists of a crimson velvet mantle with cape furled with miniver pure, the cape powdered with four rows of ermine in a narrow piece of black fur, and edged round with miniver pure five inches wide. The kirtle meeting at the waist over a white panel, and the livery being blue and tight fitting, with stomacher and panel of white or cream material, for bordering the top of the livery and being continued in a band over each shoulder. Her coronet is the same as that of her husband, while her train is two yards in length.

The eldest son of a duke bears by courtesy one of his father's inferior titles, and each younger son and daughter is addressed by his or her Christian name, as "Lord John," or "Lady Mary."

Marquess is a title apparently of German origin, and, as the name implies, is derived from the Government of marches, or frontier provinces. It was called by the Saxons, Markin Kere; and by the Germans, Markgrave. It has the next place of honour to that of a duke, and was introduced many years subsequent to the invention of the sword, and imposition of the cap of honour and dignity, with the coronet, as also by the delivery of a charter or writing. The creations, however, were not very numerous, and it would appear that the new honour was not greatly coveted by the old nobility, as to the Parliamentary Rolls it is recorded that

"John de Beaufort, Earl of Somerset, was by Richard II. created Marquess of Dorset, and when afterwards, Henry VI. deprived him of that title, the Commons of England made humble suit in Parliament to the King that he would restore him to his title of marquess. The Earl himself opposed petition, saying that 'It was a new dignity altogether unknown to his ancestors, & that, therefore, he neither craved it, nor any wise would he accept it.'"

The creation to this dignity was formerly attended with nearly the same ceremony as that of a duke; but it now simply takes place by patent under the Great Seal.

of Alice, &c.) Thence ever after the name of Comes imparted dignity; and the authority of government which was at first temporary, was afterwards enjoyed for life. Marquess in process of time when the Roman empire was divided into many kingdoms this title was retained, and not English barons called those in Latin Comites and Conduces whom in their own language they call Laklorenen, the same which the Danes in their tongue called Karung, that is honourable as I shall hereafter write, by which name, somewhat softened they are called Barons, at this day. Baro in the Saxon times the title was of a higher than dignity and eminence. Earl (Latin comes) is a rank much higher than that of any noble in the present day. It was even applied to sovereign princes. Thus, William the Conqueror, sovereign of Normandy, is frequently called Earl of Normandy, and William of Malmesbury never mentions him otherwise. The Norman kings adopted the Saxon title, and the first earls created were dignitaries of enormous power, holding not only proprietary, but virtually sovereign sway over large districts of country. Hugh Lupus, Earl of Chester, was a real potentate within his territory, though exercising his authority in the name of the king, and so with others. But the number of earls increased rapidly, whilst the possibility of furnishing them with land and revenue diminished in proportionate ratio, so that various devices were resorted to for the purpose of furnishing the new creations with the means of support. The dignity of the distinction was thus depreciated. Earls were then created with the name of some place appended to the title, and the third penny of the shire was assigned unto them; for example, the Empress Maud, daughter and heir to King Henry I., created an earl in the following words:—

"I, Maud, daughter of King Henry, and lady of the Englishmen, do give and grant unto Geoffrey de Marrewail for his service, and to his heirs after him, the earldom of Essex."

The earls amongst nobles are the second rank.

but it cannot alienate the barony from the representatives of the first baron. The fee payable on determination of the allowance of a barony by writ was fixed in 1533 at £100.

When a baron is called to the House of Peers by writ of summons the writ is in the Sovereign's name.

The coronation robes of a baron have but two rows of ermine, in other respects they are the same as those of other peers. King Charles II granted a coronet to the barons, who until his reign wore only a plain circle of gold. The coronet is formed of six silver balls, set at equal distances on an unchased circle of gold (silver gilt) bordered with ermine. A baroness has two inches of miniver and two bars of ermine on her coronation robe which has a train a yard long. She wears a coronet same as that of a baron.

A baron is styled Right Honourable, and by the sovereign Right trusty and well-beloved.

[To illustrate the meaning of COLLECTIVE TITLES, reference may be made to the terms in which a Royal Warrant is issued.]

The title of "right honourable," derived from his political offices. In Parliament and society he was invariably spoken of as "Lord John Russell," and addressed as "My Lord" but in Royal proclamations and other documents his designation was "The Right Honourable John Russell," and he was usually called "Lord John Russell."

LIFE BARONS.

Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, of whom there may not be more than six, are appointed by Patent, and rank as Barons for life, and each is entitled to a writ of summons to attend, and to sit and vote in the House of Lords.

They hold office during good behaviour, notwithstanding the demise of the Crown, but may be removed from such office, on the address of both Houses of Parliament. Their patents are on parchment under the Great Seal.

The dignity of Lords of Parliament does not descend to their heirs. Their wives rank as Baronesses, and are entitled to the prefix of "Lady," while their children are now styled "Hon." and hold special precedence.

The robes of a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary are the same as a Baron's.

A Lord of Appeal in Ordinary is styled Right Honourable.

BARONETS.

The title of Baronet is of ancient date, and was originally given to a class of Bannarets who were hereditary Barons of Parliament, and occupied the same position as the existing dignity, viz. between the great Barons (now peers) and lesser Barons, or Knights and gentlemen.

By the statutes of Richard II, every Archbishop, Bishop, Abbot, Prior, Duke, Earl, Baron, Baronet, and Knight of the Shire, was commanded to appear in Parliament according to ancient usage, and in an attainder under Henry VI, one of the jury challenged himself because his ancestors had been Baronets and Seigneurs des Parlements.

This degree of nobility also existed in Ireland, where it was hereditary, in certain families. Thus, among others, St. Leger was Baronet of Slernage; Fitzgerald, Baronet of Burchurch; Wellesly, Baronet of Narraghe (ancestor of the Duke of Wellington); and Nangle, Baronet of the Navan. These baronets were descended from some lesser barons, or gentlemen, whom Edward III. had been advised to summon by writ, to serve and sit as barons in his parliament. The writ was in the Sovereign's name.

The coronation robes of a baronet have but two rows of ermine, in other respects they are the same as those of other peers.

King Charles II granted a coronet to the baronets, who until his reign wore only a plain circle of gold. The coronet is formed of six silver balls, set at equal distances on an unchased circle of gold (silver gilt) bordered with ermine.

A baroness has two inches of miniver and two bars of ermine on her coronation robe which has a train a yard long. She wears a coronet same as that of a baron. A baronet is styled Right Honourable, and by the sovereign Right trusty and well-beloved. The children of baronets bear the courtesy title of Honourable. [To illustrate the meaning of COLLECTIVE TITLES, reference may be made to the terms in which a Royal Warrant is issued.]

and, or Badge of Ulster)—a place near the Royal Standard in battle, a funeral ceremony "meane betwixt that of a Baron and a Knight," and a right for all Baronets, then and in future, to have Letters Patent under the Great Seal of England to the effect of former letters patent of creation and these presents; the 3rd letters patent ratified and confirmed the previous ones and ordained the Degree of Baronet to be and be reputed to be a Degree of Dignity, Hereditary, mean in place between the Barons and the Knights, defined the precedence of their eldest and other sons, and set forth that all doubts and questions arising thereupon should be referred to the Privy Council.

The same were continued to Baronets of Great Britain who date from 1707, and to Baronets of the United Kingdom who date from 1801.

In 1624 James I took steps to create a Scottish Branch; these were carried out in 1625 by his son, Charles I, who granted to Baronets of Scotland, or as frequently called Nova Scotia Baronets, similar privileges (except the Ulster augmentation), and in addition grants of land in Nova Scotia with plenary baronial rights and jurisdictions and legislative powers in that plantation, and precedence above Lesser Barons in Scotland, while it was at first provided that they should charge their armorial bearings with the arms of Nova Scotia, and by a further Ordinance of Charles I. (17th November, 1624).

BADGE OF NOVA SCOTIA

There is also a patent of Edward VI. on record granting the "order, state, rank, honour, and dignity of a Baronet" to Ralph Fane (or Vane), knight, but without any specific provision for succession (see Vane list).

The Officers of Arms in Ireland are however in the habit of putting a dexter hand for Ulster's badge on the Arms of Irish Baronets.

It is to be noted that in the arms of a Baronet, the Crown assigns the precedence of the Arms of Scotland.

KNIGHTS

The eldest sons or heirs apparent of baronets derived though this order was made without in any way prejudicing letters-patents previously granted, or to the rights and privileges of any baronet, or heirs male. Ludlow Cotter, son of Sir Jas Lawrence Cotter, 4th baronet of Rockforest, 1874, when 21 years of age, received the honour of knighthood, and this is the latest instance of privilege being exercised.

It should, however, always be borne in mind that though created for an ephemeral and in its mercenary object which its members did accomplish, the Baronetage has always been dignified degree of hereditary distinction, original members having been carefully selected assuming a solemnly religious character, including bearing courts to receive the honour of knighthood. Thus Henry II. sent to David, King of Scots, Malcolm, King of Scots, to Henry II., and Edward I. to the King of Castile, to take of them "military or virile arms," a term used in those ages for the creation of a knight. The gift of arms, the privilege of using a signet, etc., were among the conditions of knighthood. Not only the King, but the great lords, created knights, as we are told by Matthew Paris: "Here the Earl of Gloucester invested with a military girdle his brother William," and Gilbert de Clare was also knighted by Simon de Montfort. In fact, any knight could create a new one. But this was afterwards prohibited, and the privilege restricted to the sovereign, or to some high personage deputed by him.

The title of knight was desired and granted as an honourable addition or mark of distinction to the highest dignity, name, and rank. But it was only when it was received under honourable circumstances like those just described for the possession of property at one time entitled to knighthood, and in the reign of Henry III., freeholders with a stated income were compelled to become knights under a fine. A proclamation was issued that who ever had £10 in land and above "should be knight in his arms, and endowed with knighthood or be fined," "to the end that England as well as Italy might be strengthened with chivalry. For those knights who were called milites held a very ancient position from the mil or gladius sword, or knights whom the King had created by bestowal of sword and belt. The latter class of dignity was highly prized, and it is certain that the obligations of such knighthood tended powerfully to elevate the mind and chasten the morals of those bound thereby, especially when the King conferred the dignity with the aid of religious ceremonies, when the Bishop administered the following oath:

"Sir, you that desire to receive the order of knighthood, swear, before God, and this holy book, that you will not fight against the King, who now bestoweth the order of knighthood upon you; you shall also swear to maintain and defend all ladies, gentlewomen, widows, and orphans; and you shall shun no adventure of your person in any way where you shall happen to be."

The oath being taken, two lords led him to the King, who drew his sword, and laid it upon his head, saying, "God and St. George make thee a good knight." Seven ladies then girded him with a sword, and four knights his spurs, and other customs were observed. These ceremonies were afterwards dispensed with, and he on whom the title was conferred simply knelt down, when the King with a drawn sword lightly tapped him on the shoulder, saying to him in French, "Soyez Chevalier au nom de Dieu," that is, "Be thou a knight in the name of God"; afterwards adding, "Advance, Chevalier" (Arise, Sir Knight).

Some contend that knights-bachelor were not full knights, but a middle degree between knights and esquires. "There be," says Camden, "who would have bachelors so called, as one would say les chevaliers, that is, knights of low degree; although others derive their name from the French verb battaler, which means to combat or fight it out." On the other hand, respectable writers have contended that the term "bachelor" indicates the non-descent of the title, as if the knight were unmarried. Passing by these discussions, it may be remarked without disparagement that a knight bachelor is scarcely regarded as the equal of the member of a defined knightly order. Knights-Bachelor are now frequently created by patent, such patent since 1801 being on loan paper with Water Great Seal, and the fees formerly payable on the creation of knights-bachelor were entirely abolished in 1804.

In addition to knights-bachelor there are nine knightly orders, named the Garter, the Thistle, St. Patrick, the Bath, Star of India, St. Michael and St. George, the Indian Empire, the Royal Victorian, and the British Empire; the last-named Order includes women as well as men, ladies in the first and second class being styled "Dames." The use of prefix "Sir" is inaccurate in the case of honorary knights of these orders when, as is usually the case, the accolade has not been conferred and no special warrant has been granted permitting use of this appellation. This also applies to clerics, who likewise do not receive the accolade (their wives being entitled to precedence, but not to style of "Lady").

The Imperial Society of Knights Bachelor has its Registry at the C. "Gen. of Arms, Queen Victoria Street, E. 4.

The wife of a knight is entitled to the prefix of either "Dame" or "Lady."

JUDGES OF THE COUNTY COURTS

Rank ex officio and only during their official life, before all Esquires,* and are entitled to the prefix of "His Honour," but neither their wives nor issue have any defined precedence.

ESQUIRES.

Amid the superfluity of discussion respecting the origin and meaning of the title of esquire, the obvious and natural conclusion is that, as the derivation is from scutifer (shield bearer), the esquires were those who bore the shields of princes, nobles, and knights, and, being themselves of respectable quality, imported some of that respectability (further reflected from the great persons whom they attended) to their office. They were frequently the personal friends and companions of their patrons. Thence the title became an object of ambition to gentlemen of the middle class, and Camden says that "the title of esquire which in former times was a title of charge and office only, crept forth among other titles of dignity and worship." The same author enumerates five classes of esquires, of graduated degrees of honour. We know no such distinction at the present time, but it has been a subject of dispute amongst our most learned writers as to whom the title of esquire really belongs.

ESQUIRE'S HELMET.

It is, however, well understood that those to whom the title is of right due are noblemen's sons; the eldest sons of younger sons of peers and their eldest sons in perpetuity; the sons of baronets, and the sons of knights; the eldest son of the eldest son of a knight and his eldest son in perpetuity; officers of the sovereign's court and household, if holding notable employment; Commanders, Companions, and Members of any Order of Knighthood, Companions of the Distinguished Service and Imperial Orders; Kings of Arms; Heralds of Arms, Sergeants-at-Law, King's Counsel; certain principal Officers of the Household, Deputy-Lieutenants and Commissioners of Lieutenantcy; Commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy; Masters of the Supreme Court, persons to whom the Sovereign grants arms with the title of esquire, persons who are styled esquires by the Sovereign in these patents, commissions, or appointments, such as sheriffs of counties, officers in the army and navy of the rank of Captain and upwards; Royal Academicians and any person who, in virtue of his office, takes precedence of esquires; justices of the peace for counties, while in the commission.

An esquire's helmet is depicted, in profile to the dexter, with visor closed.

GENTLEMEN.

If antiquarian controversy war warm as to the classes entitled to the style of esquire, the qualification for the name of gentleman has engrossed still more elaborate discussion. The question is

"The chief of the family takes place of any gentleman of the family, and though generally it be believed that gentlemen have no precedence one from another, yet reason and discretion allow that a gentleman of three generations should cede to a gentleman of ten, if there be not a very great disparity between their fortunes, and for the same reason that a gentleman of three generations claims precedence from any ordinary landed man who has newly acquired his lands."
